Russian President Vladimir Putin has warned that Moscow may use biological weapons, despite repeatedly declaring he would never use such arms against other countries. In a statement at the outset of a meeting in Sochi with German Chancellor Angela Merkel and other European leaders, Putin said he had been "concerned" by reports that the US had developed new types of biological weapons. "We have long been talking about the spread of biological weapons, and there has been an increase in their number," Putin said. "Biological weapons are an absolute horror. They cannot and must not be used. "We have not developed biological weapons. We do not plan to do so. They should
